SAB304. Cultural Engagement in Guatemala: Art, Activism, and Social Justice. 1-12 Credits.
This class will introduce you to the role that activism and artistic practices have had in struggles for human rights and in creating conditions for achieving social justice in contemporary Guatemala. The course will give you historical and cultural tools to help you understand the political and cultural challenges different communities have faced, and are still facing, as they try to achieve social justice in the country. Through service learning, lectures and visits to historical and cultural sites, we will attempt to understand the internal structures of class, race and gender, as well as external geopolitical forces that have created unequal, exploitative conditions in the country. We will focus on past authoritarian regimes and repressive practices that still have deep effects in contemporary Guatemalan culture, while also exploring past and current social movements and contestatory artistic practices that have resisted these genocidal forces. Although Guatemala is now a democratic country, exploitation, marginalization, and other issues that keep reproducing unequal conditions for different communities are still pervasive. This program will give you the unique opportunity of engaging with activists who work every day to better conditions of indigenous people, migrants, women, and children. It will also give you the chance of meeting artists who work to preserve and disseminate Guatemala’s unique culture, to make visible social contradictions, and to imagine new ways of achieving social justice.
